The Allawah Flats, Braddon 1959

The Allawah and Bega Flats opposite Civic Centre were built in the 1950s. The internal design of the buildings were well thought out but not the sites of the buildings. Those blocks facing Civic Centre received in the mornings the full burst of the summer sun in the mornings on the bedroom side of the flats and in the evenings on the veranda side.

Originally the exteriors of the flat blocks were painted - red, yellow and blue and raised above ground level to allow car parking space underneath. The colours were fashionable after the war and were based on Piet Mondian's work made known to the world through the magazine De Stijl. Each flat was reached by stair cases only which made it extremely difficult for mothers who had to carry prams/strollers up and down flights of stairs. Laundries were forgotten in the original design and had to be added as an after thought - under each block of flats. The style of the flat facade buildings were similar to those designed by Le Corbusier in the 1930s.
