Ainslie Hostel

Not on the 1949 is Frank Gifford who arrived in Canberra in 1949. Part of his story is told in Alan Foskett's book Home for Workers A History of Canberra's Seven Post Second World War Workmen's Hostels. Frank Gifford came to Canberra from Melbourne to work for AV Jennings and initially worked as a carpenter on the construction of Reid House. Bill Kinnane was a tip truck owner who was contracted to Jennings to bring building materials to the site and remove building rubble. Frank Gifford still lives in Canberra in the suburb of Holder. Alan Foskett notes in his book that Ainslie Hostel opened during 1949 with accommodation for 275 workers and 50 staff. The fibro, timber and iron roofed hostel was built in 1948 by day labour work force employed by the Commonwealth Department of Works. It consisted of 11 barrack-style buildings, each containing twenty-five 100 square feet single rooms and shared ablution facilities each consisting of four showers and four toilets...

Capital Hill Hostel

This hostel was built in 1925 and named CAPITOL HILL HOSTEL. It was allowed to run-down during the 1930s and 1940s. In 1947 a new section - barracks accommodation - was erected and in 1948 another enlarged hostel using barrack accommodation was erected for the influx of tradesmen arriving in the territory many of whom were from overseas. For a short time it was used for married couples. Only those of British or Australian birth over the age of 21 years were allowed to vote hence many who lived at this hostel are not on this list.¹ Alan Foskett Homes for the Workers, A History of Canberra's Seven Post Second World War Workmen's Hostels has quoted from an article written by John Ritchie in The Canberra Times on the post World War II history of the newer hostel. It mentioned that whilst Hillside Hostel (also on Capital Hill) was still full – accommodating nearly 500 men, Capital Hill Hostel was nearly empty. Tenders were called in the same issue of the paper for the removal of Capital Hill Hostel. The article went on to say ...To enforce the latter rule [cooking in rooms] there was the manager, Mr Jim

1949 Electoral Roll - Hostels

Neilson, whose long experience of migrant hostels and workmen's camps followed seven years service in the Australian Army, which he left as RSM. Fifteen stone in weight, 5 feet 10 inches tall and just a bit less than that across the shoulders, Jim Neilson (now of Hotel Acton) ruled Capital Hill with a combination of firmness and fairness that made him popular with all except, perhaps, the one or two 'fighting men' of the type that kicks dogs...Could those Capital Hill guests eat? "Yes, and double up again and again. I gave them five choices of main dishes at lunch; at teatime four kinds of sweets. Once a week 520 and three quarter pound stakes. Mr Bjorac [the cook] for all his wholesome large-scale cooking was a culinary artist; in his spare time and for party fare would often load an entire banqueting table with visual and gastronomic masterpieces...Also mentioned is Laurie's café run by Laurie and Rita Berry.

Fairbairn Hostel

Alan Foskett Homes for the Workers, A History of Canberra's Seven Post Second World War Workmen's Hostel: Fairbairn Hostel was established at the end of 1948 by the Commonwealth Department of Works and Housing to accommodate some 200 migrant workers and tradesmen, mostly of Maltese, but some of Polish origin. Initially it consisted of tents and a central mess and recreational unit, much like the style of workers camps established in Canberra during the twenties.

The Maltese tradesmen had been nominated by the Department of Works and Housing who had trade tested them in Valetta. The first group arrived in Canberra during January 1949. There was immediate discontent about living conditions at Fairbairn, the discontent compounded by criticism of their trade skills... Later the tents were replaced by the RAAF with malthoid-lined wooden huts in 1949. The hostel was closed in 1951.
